

Intelligence Analysis Minor (2013-2014)

The minor in intelligence analysis is designed for students who are interested in careers in homeland security or other intelligence-related fields. This minor focuses on developing the skills of intelligence analysis, including research, writing, briefing, and analytical tradecraft. Students will also explore ethical issues in the field and new developments in the analysis of intelligence information. The curriculum fosters a broad knowledge of content in several disciplines valued by employers in homeland security and intelligence-related fields. The minor offers students sufficient flexibility to pursue their primary interests while also preparing themselves for careers in intelligence analysis. Students in this minor are strongly encouraged to pursue advanced training in Arabic, Chinese, or Russian languages.

Students who are American citizens may apply for an internship in intelligence analysis at the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Credits earned for the internship are in addition to those required for the minor, and are not required for completion of the minor. Students who intend to apply for the internship should begin the process no later than September of their sophomore year, since the security clearance process can take a year or more. More information on FBI internships can be found at www.fbijobs.gov/2.asp.

This program of study is offered by the Department of Criminology, Law and Society but is multidisciplinary in nature and requires coursework from at least two different academic departments.
