Anatomy of a Journal Article

Reading Assignment: Christopher Tomlins, "Your Name in This Space," AHA Perspectives (May 2002) and Peter Coclanis, "Publishing in Journals in the 21st Century," AHA Perspectives (April 2011), available on BLACKBOARD or online at <http://theaha.org>.

Writing Assignment: Analyze the structure of: Michael Kwass, "Big Hair: A Wig History of Consumption in Eighteenth-Century France," American Historical Review, (June 2006), 631-59 (available through JSTOR). Think about the historical article as a distinctive genre of writing, possessing a recognizable structure and particular scholarly conventions. Print out the article. In the margins of the article, identify the distinctive parts of the article (such as introduction, historiography, theoretical framework, discussion of sources, body of the essay, conclusion, addressing the so-what question). Also note the different kinds of evidence the author uses; how the author qualifies or modulates his claims; and how the author makes transitions from one part of the essay to the next. Bring the essay to class for discussion. Be prepared to turn in your annotated copy of the essay.

Feb. 19

Writing Strategies

Reading Assignment: Gerald Graff and Cathy Beckenstein, "So What? Who Cares": Saying Why It Matters, in They Say, I Say (2010), pp. 92-101, and other handouts.

Writing Assignment: Turn in a preliminary bibliography that lists the relevant primary sources, secondary source books, and journal articles pertaining to your project. Make sure the bibliography is presented in the correct Chicago Manual of Style format.

Practicalities of the Profession

Reading Assignment: "Cover Letters and C.V.'s for History Job Seekers," by Carl Ashley, AHA Perspectives (Dec. 2004) and Elizabeth Blackmar, "Notes on Applying for Grants," available on BLACKBOARD.

March 18

Oral Reports

Writing Assignment: Turn in a revised topic statement and process paper (one-to-two pages). Discuss your research process to date. Describe how your topic has evolved over time, your major research questions, and the major genres of primary sources that you are using. Discuss where you are in the research process: what you have accomplished thus far and what you need to do before beginning to write your essay. Be prepared to provide a brief, informal (no more than 5 minutes) oral summary of your paper.

March 25

Conventions of Peer Review

Reading Assignment: Guides for Reviewers (handouts)

Writing Assignment: Turn in a draft Introduction, 3-5 pages in length. The Introduction usually includes a discussion of the historical background or context, an analysis of the relevant historiography, a discussion of your primary sources base and/or theoretical framework..

April 1

Individual Meetings--Bring a brief preliminary outline of your paper to the meeting, along with your thesis statement.

April 15

PAPERS DUE BY 5:00 P.M.

Please send an email copy of your paper to your reviewer and give me a hard copy. Send a short abstract to all class members via email.

April 22

Discussion and Critique

Reading and Writing Assignment: Carefully read the paper assigned to you. Prepare a 1-to-2 page critique, keeping in mind the conventions of scholarly peer review. Bring two hard copies to class, one for the author and one for me. Prepare a short (no more than five minutes) oral presentation in which you discuss the reviewed paper's thesis, major kinds of primary sources, one major area of strength in the paper, and one major area in need of improvement. Also, read the abstracts for the other papers. Be prepared to pose salient questions to the authors.

April 29

Thinking about the Dissertation and Beyond

Reading Assignment: Andrew McIlwaine Bell, "Beat the Clock! Managing the Final Lap of Your PhD Program," AHA Perspectives (Dec. 2007); Brad S. Gregory, "Managing the Terror," AHA Perspectives (Jan. 2009); Craig Gill, "Writing the Book Proposal," THE JUNTO (May 18, 2015)--all available on BLACKBOARD.

FINAL PAPERS are due, in hard copy, by 5:00 pm on Wednesday, May 6. Papers should be approximately 25-35 pages long, plus notes, and must use the appropriate scholarly apparatus for citations and bibliography found in The Chicago Manual of Style (available through Fenwick Library online databases) or in Kate L. Turabian's A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations.

Grading:

Research Paper (first and second versions):	75%
Class discussions, oral presentations, other written assignments:	25%

Failure to attend class regularly and complete the preliminary assignments may result in failure for the class, even if a completed research paper is submitted.

Research papers will be evaluated using the following criteria:

- use of historiography
- range and depth of historical research (especially the use of primary sources)
- clarity of writing and organization
- depth of analysis and significance of historical contribution
